HINTS ON COMING TO CALIFORNIA.

From T. S. Van Dyke's work, "Southern California", we take the following:

"The many letters received by residents of Southern California from Eastern friends asking advice about moving to California make it certain that a few hints upon the subject will not be out of place. And, first, why do you wish to come? To better your condition? If doing well where you are, is it wise to risk transplantation anywhere? If you are not doing well where you are it must be because you are indolent, ignorant, or unfortunate. You must fall within one of these three classes. If too indolent you may rest assured that this is, just now, the last place to live without work or money, though one may certainly exist here more easily than elswhere in the United States. If ignorant of work, this is no better place than any other to begin learning. If your failure coms from ill-fortune, other than ill-health, it will be well to remember that while California has been the largest "lucky bag" in the universe, it has different from others only in the size and not in number of its prize. If you are a professional man, book-keeper, or clerk, you may possibly do as well here as in the East, where all avenues to a living are now thronged. There are plenty of openings and always will be for the honest, energetic workingman, with fair amount of "gumption," who will make his employer's interest his own. The Chinese can never supply the large and increasing demand for such men. The Chinese only fill the place of the man who drops his half-raised shovel of earth back into the hole at the sound of the whistle or bell rather than toss it out; of the man whose favorite motto is that "it is as cheap to play for nothing as to work for nothing," meaning by "nothing" anything less than the very highest wages paid; of the man who saddles his horse and starts for the groggery when his employer starts for town; and of the man who never does anything except what he is especially told to do. Such are the majority of the white men whose places are filled with Chinamen, because the Chinamen is no meaner than they are, and is much cheaper. But no one considers a Chinaman half a substitute for a reliable white man.

Plenty of cheap land still remains and of as good quality as the highest priced. The Southern Pacific Railroad still has considerable, and there are large ranches that may be had cheap by taking the whole. But by cheap I do not mean cheap as the term would be understood anywhere east of the Colorado rive—cheap for raising grain, stock, or for general farming. It is cheap only for the purpose to which the lands of Southern California are fast being devoted, which is the raising of choice fruits that cannot be raised anywhere in the United States, and the making of comfortable homes by people of means who are weary of the long siege of the elements elsewhere. It is quite useless for you to quarrel with these prices, to call them "fancy" and not intrinsic values; and to declare the true value of land to be the principal of the interest that can be made out of it. We know all that and long since talked the same. But the best lands of Southern California, especially those capable of irrigation, are as much an exception to the general criterison of values as the banks of the Hudson or the rolling hills of Staten Island. Their prices may be based upon a false foundation—to-wit; climate, scenery and general comfort. Nevertheless people pay them. This has been going on for years, and is constantly on the increase. Year after year rapidly increases the number of those who are anxious to buy and improve. Who dare say when this will stop? That lands are in many places too high, even if judged by this standard, in no way affects the correctness of the standard itself as compared with the common standard of Eastern farming lands.

Every part of the land that is easily accessible is well worth seeing, and, if you think of settling, is worthy of examination. With a few rare exceptions, good things can be raised in abundance all over. Nearly everywhere considerable produce can be raised without irrigation, and almost nowhere is that used for grain. Yet nowhere can you find a man who will not prefer ten acres with a stream of water to fifty without it, if he has to earn his living from the soil, or if he wants to make a very profitable or at all handsome place. It is about the same with climate. Every county contains a variety, and every one contains good climate—good enough for almost any one. Every county, too, contains belts of heavy and reliable rainfall, and all are adundantly supplied with good scenery, hunting drives, and out-door attractions. All have fair hotels and traveling facilities and accommodations. Some are, of course, better in some respects than others; but believe nobody who tells you there is nothing to see or nothing of conceivense elsewhere.

EGGS OR POULTRY.

BY TRIXIE IN SEMI-TROPICAL PLANTER.

One of the most serious questions for the one who proposes to embark in the poultry business is, shall I breed for eggs or market poultry? Many make the grand mistake of their lives right here by being unable to decide, so they conclude that if their is money in either of them there must be in both, and they select a breed noted for laying continuously and also a breed most kept poultry fame. The result is they ignominiously fail and then they abuse us poor poultry writers and call us liars. Well sometimes we are almost led to believe that they are more than half right. Before deciding for which purpose mainly you should breed poultry you should look about you and find how you are situated as regards the market and which commands the best average price, and is the readiest sale the year round. If any one tells you that such and such a breed is an all-purpose breed tell him to go and shake himself. "This thing of an all-purpose fowl is simply a delusion if not a gross fraud as any person who gives the subject a moment's thought cannot help but clearly see. Should you decide to breed for eggs you have the Leghorns, Minorcas, Black Spanish, Houdan's, Hamburgs and Polish to select from. These all belong to the non-sitting breeds and if you wish to raise chicks, which you must and as many as you can, you must either trust to an incubator or get some motherly disposed hens under which to hatch them; you cannot depend on your hens of any of the breeds above named for they simply won't. These breeds are all quick to feather, and, if well fed at six weeks old you can select your off-colored or disqualified cockerels for the broiler market and thus recure a better price for them, at six weeks old, than you can if kept until matured the next fall or winter.

Now should you determine to breed for market poultry you have the Brahama, Cochins, Leghors, Plymouth Rocks, Javas and others; in fact there is a fine field from which to select and they all have a host of enthusiastic admirers, and for the purpose indicated either of them are admirably adapted. Be cautious in making your selection and before you do select a breed be sure that you are perfectly satisfied with it for if you are not and see a breed you like better you will never succeed with the one you now have. A perfectly satisfied mind is of first importance to the poultry breeder.

ESCAPED FROM SIBERIA.

An Exile's Thrilling Story of His Flight From Russia's Penal Colony.

A Russian political exile who recently made his escape from Siberia tells a thrilling story of his escape and the hardships which he endured in his attempt to regain his liberty. He is a man of about middle age, of pleasant appearance, and speaks English well, as most educated Russians do. He gives his name as Baker—a name which he assumed since his arrival in London.

With numerous companions Baker was sent into exile early in 1881 for complicity in some plot against the Czar's life, and immured within one of the Siberian interior villages, surrounded by vast tracts of ice and snow. Here the prisoners were left in the keeping of a few guards, but they were prevented from escaping far more effectually by the fear of becoming the prey of the fierce wolves, whose baying at night could be distinctly heard on all sides of the village. The idea and hope of escape never leaves an exile's mind, says Baker, and his one absorbing thought was how to reach freedom, and the hope of accomplishing this remains with an exile until death. The exiles were obliged to go into the forests near by and cut what wood they used, and it was by this very means that Baker succeeded in eluding the vigilance of the guards and in leaving the village.

One day while he and a companion were securing their supply of wood, they accidentally came upon a small opening, concealed by an evergreen tree, which led to a good-sized cave. Here was a means of escape. Without giving the details, which Baker relates so fully, it is enough to say that the two exiles kept the matter secret, and removed day by day to the cave such of their provisions as they could spare without exciting attention. When the cave was stocked with food enough to last for some time if frugally used, the men prepared to take their departure and begin the hard, doubtful struggle for liberty. So, one day, they went out for wood but did not return. Of course search was made for them, and the country scoured, but, haying thrown their pursuers off the track, the exiles lived securely for nearly two weeks within sight of their recent place of confinement. At the end of that time they came out of their hiding-place and began a journey full of hair-breadth escapes and shocking sufferings.

After innumerable dangers from wolves, from Cossacks [illegible] freezing and starvation, they finally reached civilization; but Baker's companion died soon after their escape from the effects of the terrible exposures he had endured. Baker says that there is an organized movement on foot among nihilists to effect the escape of a large number of prominent political exiles, and that the arrangements for the accomplishment of the plan are most extensive. Nihlists in all parts of the world have contributed to the fund necessary to carry out the design, which will soon be put into operation. —London Cor. Chicago Mail.

THE OLD-FASHIONED KITCHEN.

How dear to my heart are the days of my boyhood!
What chestnuts arise as I call them to mind!
The buttery, the cellar, the big pile of cord-wood,
And the old chopping-block with the kindlings behind.
The wide opened farm-yard, the milking-stool by it;
The cow—on her neck hung a discordant bell;
The barn and the cow-house, the chicken-roost nigh it,
The apple tree—out of its branches I fell,
Near the old-fashioned kitchen, the gable-roofed kitchen,
The old-fashioned kitchen built on in an L.

To hie to that kitchen I deemed it a pleasure,
For often at noon, when returned from the shop,
I found on the table a half-gallon measure
Filled up to the brim with cold butter-milk pop.
How ardent I seized it, there's really no knowing,
How quickly I drank it I hardly can tell;
Then soon, with the butter-milk down my chin flowing,
In a manner on which I dislike now to dwell,
I skipped from that kitchen, that old-fashioned kitchen,
That old-fashioned kitchen built on in an L.

TORPEDO FISH.

The Electricity in Them Will Knock a Man Down.

How a Savannah Athlete Tried to Pick One Up on a Bet—The Shocks Investigated by Scientists—Curious Results Shown.

On the beach of Tybee, the other day, an old fisherman in oilskins was unloading a boat that had been full of fish, when a lusty young man clad in white trousers and a white flannel shirt, met the old fellow's eye.

"You look like a likely hefter," called out the old fisherman, his hands and arms meanwhile falling to the perpendicular and a merry twinkle taking possession of his eyes.

"A likely what?" rather indignantly rejoined the youth.

"A likely hefter—a chap who can lift a heap," was the reply.

"Yes; I am considered pretty strong in the Savannah Athletic Club," was the answer.

"Did you ever lift much fish?" asked the old fellow, throwing a huge netful of tinkers on the dock, and looking his companion over with a critical eye.

"I never saw the fish I couldn't lift."

The fisherman thrust his hand into his pocket, from which, after a violent struggle and much invective, he hauled out a very flat, light leather pocket-book, that was closed with a strap and a piece of rope-yarn. He took from it a clean ten-dollar bill and said: 'I'm going on eighty-one years old next muster day, but I'll bet you ten dollars even you can't lift fish that I can."

"Where's your fish?" asked the youth.

"Well, I'll tell you. Here's a fish," and he poked among the tinkers and pointed to a large, solid and skate-like fish in the bottom of the dory. "Let's see; it's about five foot up to the dock. I'll bet you the ten dollars you can't toss the fish up there."

"I don't want to take your money," replied the young man, magnanimously, as a number of spectators drew around. "But if you've got a half a dozen of the fish, string 'em all together and give me something worth doing. I've lifted 500 pounds before breakfast."

"Oh, yes, I've heard tell of you," said the old man, somewhat warmly. "You're the man that ate a piece of rubber hose for breakfast, and didn't find out it wasn't sausage till somebody told you. See that thumb-nail?" he asked, holding up a curious stub with a horny growth upon it. "Well, I served prentice once to a box-maker, and used to put in all the screws with that nail, and pull 'em out with my teeth when they broke off. You know me, and I'll stick to it you can't heave that fish up to the dock, and there's the money."

The Savannah athlete, thus called upon, deposited ten dollars with a well-known gentleman who had joined the party, and went down the ladder into the boat, while the old fisherman climbed up on the dock to watch the feat.

"Stand back there!" shouted the boss tosser, rolling up his sleeves. "This fish might hit you, old man, and knock some of the blow out of you."

"Heave away," responded the man in oil-skins, tipping a wink at the crowd in general.

The young man now stepped into the dory and poked away the tinkers—small mackerel—that were sliding about. Standing on the edge of the boat he stooped down, grasped the skate-like fish and lifted, raising it about a foot. Then, uttering a yell, he staggered a moment and fell with a resounding splash into the water, nearly capsizing the boat in accomplishing the feat, which was received with shouts of laughter from the dock, the old fisherman fairly dancing a hornpipe on the rail.

"What's the matter with you?" he shouted, as the unfortunate athlete scrambled into the dory again, swearing like a pirate. "Trying to upset the boat, are you?"

"Who struck me? Somebody gave me a knock on the neck just as I was lifting."

"Nonsense," cried nearly every man in the crowd. "You wasn't touched."

"I'll take my oath I felt something hit me. If this is a skin game I want to know it." Bracing himself firmly in the boat, he again grasped the fish with both hands and raised it three feet, and then fish, athlete and all went backward among the tinkers. Man, fish, oars and bailers were mixed up for a moment. At last the Savannah "hefter" made a break for the dock, and, once upon it, sank down upon a pile of boards. He was as white as a sheet and was covered with scales from head to foot.

"Send for a doctor!" he gasped, as the men crowded around.

"Why? What's the matter with you any way?"

"I've had a stroke," whispered the victim. "The moment I stooped to lift it, I felt it a runnin' all over me. It's in our family; but I've got it bad," and here he rubbed his arms and legs. "It knocked me clean off my feet," he added, "and my limbs felt like sticks. Send—" and here a roar of laughter broke from the men, and one of them, seizing him by the arms, jerked him to his feet.

"You're all right, my lad; only next time don't go fooling around old Amos." He's a hard nut."

"Here's yer money, sonny," said the old man, holding out a bill. "You've earned it."

"What do you mean?" gasped the athlete.

"What do you mean? Why, jest this: Yer haven't had a shock of paralysis. Yer tried to heft one of these durned torpeders. They'll knock a mule down if yer gives 'em the chance."

The athlete looked vacantly ahead, took back his money and left amid the renewed laughter of the crowd.

"He'll have a yarn to tell the Savannah folks." said the perpetrator of the joke, "but I do hate to hear a man blow and thought I'd take him down. Injured? No, sir-ee. He'll feel stiff for an hour or so, but it won't hurt him. I've been struck by them one hundred times, and it's no fun, I can tell yer. It's just like being struck by a mild stroke of lightning. I don't generally touch 'em, but a man gave me one dollar to fetch one in, so I kept it in the boat. They'll shock you right through the net. When I was a-hauling in the tinker seine this morning I knowed I had a shock-fish from the jerking of my arms. The shocks come right up the wet cording, so that sometimes you can't hang on anyhow. I've seen a man who stuck one with an iron harpoon, thinking it a skate, knocked down so quick he didn't know what hit him.

"You remember old Curt, that used to do the chores around here ten years ago? He lived on rum; he'd do anything for it. Well, Perce Haddon put up a big job on him once. He'd had the jim-jams and he'd sworn off any quantity of times, but always got back again. He was just getting over a spree when Perce came along with a shock fish. Old Curt had never seen one before, so Perce walks up and says: 'Curt, where can I get this fish cleaned?' 'What's it worth?' says Curt. 'Well, half a dollar, I reckon,' says Perce. 'I'll draw it myself,' says the old nigger. 'Go ahead,' says Perce, and the old man fetched out his big case knife and began, two or three of the boys gathering round. 'You ain't so steady as I've seen you, Curt,' says Perce, nearly bursting a-laughing, for as soon as the old man touched the fish his arm shot out, so that the knife flew about three feet. He didn't say any thing, but picked the knife up and jabbed it into the fish again. You'd have thought he was making passes like a sleight-of-hand chap; his hands jerked this way and that, and the sweat rolled down off his face like rain. At last he dropped her, and sat right down on the grass and says: 'Perce, give me something to steady my nerves; I've got 'em again.' Well, old Curt never heard the last of that, and I never saw him drink afterwards.

"What's the use of the shocks? Why, I reckon they kill fish with' em or drive 'em off."

The latter assumption is probably correct. The electric apparatus of the torpedo fish is its defense, and is certainly a good one. Its electric organs have been compared to the voltaic pile, and consist of two series of layers of hexagonal cells, the intervening spaces between the plates being filled with a trembling, jelly-like substance, so that each cell can be compared to the Leyden jar. Each torpedo carries about 480 of these batteries, the whole being equal in power to about fifteen Leyden jars, making 3,500 square inches charged to the highest degree. The upper side of the fish is positive, the lower negative, the shocks evidently being entirely at the will of the strange electrician. The torpedo is met with frequently along the Atlantic coast, especially along the Georgia portion of it.

A naturalist once made some interesting experiments, one of which was the application of the telephone to a torpedo, to see if the shock gave an audible sound. Such proved to be the case, a short, low creak accompanying moderate excitement, the discharge lasting about one-fifteenth of a second. When the fish was greatly excited the croak became a groan, sounding, it was said, like the tonality of mi, and occupying four or five seconds. When the attention of scientific men in England was first called to the torpedo fish, Dr. Walsh, F. R. S., amused himself and scientific London with one of these fishes, after a series experiments at the Ile de Re. The performances took the form of piscatorial seances, and it became the rage to take a fish shock. Wondrous medicinal virtue was ascribed to it, and the demand for torpedoes brought a rich harvest to fishermen. Their use in medicine, however, was not new, as Discorides, the physican of Antony and Cleopatra, is said to have made use of them.

Dr. Walsh's method was to place a living torpedo upon a wet towel; from a plate he suspended two pieces of brass wire by means of silken cord, which served to insulate them. Round the torpedo were eight persons standing on insulated substances. One end of the brass wire was supported by the wet towel, the other end being placed in a basinful of water. The first person had a finger of one hand in this basin and a finger of the other hand in a second basin, also full of water. The second person placed a finger of one hand in this second basin and a finger of the other in a third basin. The third person did the same, and so on until a complete chain was established between the eight persons and nine basins. Into the ninth basin the end of the brass wire was plunged, while Dr. Walsh applied the other end to the back of the torpedo, thus establishing a complete conducted circle.

At the moment when the experimenter touched the torpedo the eight actors in the experiment felt a sudden shock, similar in all respects to that communicated by the shock of a Leyden jar, only less intense. The torpedo was then placed upon an insulated supporter and communicated to twenty persons similarly placed from forty to fifty shocks in a minute and a half. Each effort made by the fish was accompanied by a depression of the eyes, which were slightly projecting in their natural state, and seemed to be drawn within their orbits, while the other parts of the body remained immovable. If only one of the organs were touched, in place of a strong and sudden shock, only a slight sensation was experienced—a numbness rather than a shock. The same result followed with every experiment tried. The fish was tried with a non-conducting rod, and no shock followed; glass or a rod covered with wax produced no effect; touched with metalic wire a violent shock followed. A Boston physician in making experiments with a powerful fish was several times completely floored, and when at a distance of twelve feet he struck a fish with a gig, the shock was so powerful that he could not release his hold.

Quite a number of electric fishes are known, of which the South American gymnotus is undoubtedly the most powerful. It is that they are caught by driving wild mustangs in the water, the fish exhausting their powers upon them, often fatally. The torpedoes are then captured by the natives. In all nine different species are known, three of the curious electricians belonging to the Ray family. One is a swordfish, another a catfish, called in the Nile country of Egypt "the thunder fish," and the third is the electric tetraod on from Comoro. The latter gives only a faint shock, but strong enough to probably form a protection from various animals.—Savannah Cor. Philadelphia Times.

THE ART OF TRAVELING.

How to Girdle the Globe at a Comparatively Small Expense.

Have you ever talked with a man who has traveled around the world and seen every thing from the mouth of the Congo to the Chinese wall? I met one this morning on the west end veranda. He travels all the time, and he told me that he made a point of getting into cities and countries at holiday times, when he could see them at their best. That is why he stays in America in summer. His next stopping place is Persia; then he goes into Egypt, and he will reach China in April, when the fetes are held. I asked him what it cost to live as he did. "It would cost you about $12 a day to follow in my paths," he answered, "but I do it for $7.25. Living expenses have averaged me that the past year. I keep a record of every thing, and know to a penny what I spend. I always travel first-class, see all there is to be seen, and I don't think I have the reputation of being niggardly. But I have traveling down to a science. It costs me now about 25 per cent. of what it did when I began. Of course some of the reduction comes from the cheapness of traveling facilities, but a good part of it comes from knowing what I am about.

Traveling is a business, and to do it economically one has to learn it as he has a trade. For example, tipping costs me about one-third what it would inexperienced people, because I know when to tip and when not to. Then in living I save again. I live on the European plan always, so that if I am sight-seeing I can get my meals anywhere without feeling that I am paying for another I do not eat. Then I always avoid a table d'hote. That's another way of paying for more than you want. My biggest meal is my breakfast. If I get a good one I don't care much what I have the rest of the day. I find that most travelers feel the same way. I keep a diary of every thing I do, and I can tell what I did and where I was on any day for twenty years past. I can only speak one language—English, though I have picked up a smattering of French, but I get along with my native tongue. You will find English-speaking people the world over, and I never trouble myself about the language of the country I am going to.—Philadelphia Press.

ABOUT PERSPIRATION.

The Amount of Water Evaporated Daily by the Lungs and Skin.

The human body is made up for the most part of water. A man weighing 154 pounds contains about 110 pounds of water, and only forty-five pounds of dry matter. Water is therefore vitally necessary to all human existence, and is supplied in all kinds of food, as well as with liquids, and also in the atmosphere that we breathe. It is constantly being thrown off from the body, and forms a very important agent in removing decayed matter from the system. Water is removed from the system by means of the kidneys, by the lungs and through the skin. The amount of water daily evaporated by lungs and skin, in a healthy condition of the system, is equal to about one-third of the weight of the whole food, solid and liquid, which is taken into the stomach. The skin of a full-grown man therefore exhales in twenty-four hours, in ordinary circumstances, from one and a half to two pounds of water in insensible perspiration. When, in hot weather, or in undergoing violent exertion the perspiration becomes sensible, and instead of exhaling in a gentle moisture is thrown off in large drops of water, a much greater weight is disposed of in this way. The action of this exhalation takes place through glands. These glands are cylindrical tubes, arranged in the form of a globular coil situated in the connective tissue immediately under the third and inner layer of the skin. From each gland a small duct passes upward through the layers of the skin and terminates in a very minute and oblique opening on the surface. The folds of the perspiratory gland are surrounded by a close network of capillary blood vessels, from which the watery and salt ingredients of the perspiration are exuded into the tube, and by capillary attraction are drawn to the surface and thrown off. It does not seem so strange that the human body can throw off nearly two pints of water daily, so gradually and so gently that it is not felt as moisture, when we remember how many glands there are and how very small each atom of moisture must be. On the back, the thighs and legs there are about 500 perspiratory glands to the square inch; on the breast, the forehead, neck, forearm, and back of the hand and foot, about 1,000 to the square inch; and on the sole of the foot and on the palm of the hand, 2,700 in the same space. It is estimated that the number of perspiratory glands over the whole body is not less than 2,300,000, and as each tubular coil when unraveled is about one-fifteenth of an inch in length, the entire extent of tubing used to throw off the perspiration is not less than 153,000 inches, or nearly two miles and a half. A certain portion of decaying matter of the body is thrown off through the perspiration, but the principal office of this exhalation is to regulate the temperature of the body. When the body is kept in a state of cleanliness and health, so that the circulation is regular and the perspiratory glands are always evenly but seldom abnormally active, exposure to severe cold can be safely borne. When undue exertion brings out a greater flow of perspiration than can be readily and quickly removed by evaporation, the moisture chills the skin surface, the little mouths of the sweat tubes contract, there is what we call a checking of the perspiration, which immediately produces a sensation of chilliness. We have taken cold, we say, and severe illness often results from this interference with the natural evaporation of the skin.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Royal Recreation.

King Otto of Bavaria, whose mental condition is really pitiable, has now taken to peeling potatoes for a pastime. At last accounts he claimed to have a contract to peel all the potatoes used in the Munich hotels. It is so rare that a monarch takes a whim in the direction of useful labor that we are constrained at this moment to regard Otto as the most useful divine-right potentate in Europe. When the Czar of Russia takes to sawing wood and the Emperor of Austria learns the shoemaking trade we shall hold that the European end of civilization is moving upward in the scale.—N. Y. World.

DEACON BURDETTE.

His Talk Out of Church on Current Topics.

DELIVER US FROM RICHES.

"Great possessions may bring great misfortunes." The wise man is sometimes correct. Only six months ago a man in Ohio was left a fortune of $700,000 by the death of his father. And already his brothers, sisters and cousins have gone into court and proved that the man's father had three wives at one time, that he died head and ears in debt to all his relatives, that his fortune was dishonestly obtained and that he was a defaulter to the government, that he had been violently insane at several periods of his life and was in a condition of hopeless imbecility at the time he made this will, that the man forged this will any how, and that he was not able to take care of such a property in any case, being himself little better than an idiot. He has still a little of the money left, but he leaves it out on the doorstep every night, in the hope that somebody will come along and steal it.

THE WEAK POINT IN THE EVIDENCE.

"At five minutes of 11 o'clock, on the 11th of June, I shall drop dead," said Charles Kirtland, of Piqua, Ohio, eleven years ago. And at five minutes to 11 o'clock on the morning of June 11, 1887, a baker's wagon ran over Charles and broke his leg. "Drop bread," was what Charles meant to say when he struck out in the prophecy business.

HEAVEN LOVES THE HEATHEN.

Favored above all lands are the Isles of Sandwich. In their recent war of the rebellion the entire army only numbered 147 men, so if every soldier under arms, and the sutler in the tent, writes a magazine history of the war, the series of war articles can only run twelve years and four months. And yet some people believe in a second probation for the heathen. Not much; they seem to get their heaven here.

A BEAUTIFUL HEATHEN CUSTOM.

When a Chinaman earnestly presses a visitor to stay to dinner, the visitor is then aware that he is not wanted, and straightway he goes home. In America the invitation to remain to dinner, however cordially phrased, often means just what it does among the lying heathen, but what puzzles the Christian is to know just when it means "stay" and when it means "go." In some respects the heathen hold away over us.

THE TRAMP.

Slow paced, with listless step he moved along,
To where the woodbine mantled all the door,
And tossed its restless shadows on the floor;
His idle breath, escaping in a song,
Bore scents of Old Tom Juniper along;
Upon both feet he limped, as travel sore.
For alms he asked; ate them and asked for more;
And lingered yet, the banquet to prolong,
While I felt envy of his bone and brawn,
And his glad life, so free from toil or care;
And did not know, till after he was gone,
That he had taken with him my best pair
Of summer clothes, and other things, to pawn,
And drifted idly off—we knew not where.

Ah, would that I, like him, might come and go,
As birds and winds and shadows go and come,
Careless of all things sad or burdensome;
Living as idly as fair lilies grow
Beside the dreamy river's slumb'rous flow;
At morn, awakened by the hollow drum
Of partridge in the thicket; by the hum
Of over busy bees at noontime's glow,
Lulled to my midday slumber in the wood;
Drone like, to eat the sweets by others stored;
To live with birds and winds in brotherhood,
My fashion plate the clothes line, and my board
The farmer's care—but, ah, it is no good;
I have no luck; I would get caught and scored.

Just as Sis Said.

Mr. De Sickly has called upon Bobby's sister, and is waiting for that young lady to make her appearance. Bobby enters in the meantime.

De Sickly, with a grin—How de do, Bobby? Don't you know me? Come and tell me what's my name.

Bobby—Well, sir, if it ain't just as Sis said, you haven't sense enough to know what your name is. If you'll wait a minute I'll find out for you. I heard pa say he had you on the list, so I guess he must know your name.—Texas Siftings.

Home, Sweet Home.

She (thoughtfully)—George, dear, are there not times in your life when the pathos and truth of that most beautiful of all songs, "Home, sweet home, there is no place like home," appear to you with startling vividness, and fill your soul with longing?

He (a baseball player)—Yes, indeed, particularly when I'm on third base with two men out.—New York Sun.

A Gentle Hint.

Omaha Husband—The theatre will be half over before we get started.

Young Wife—Well, I can't get these gloves buttoned.

"Don't see why you should be slow and awkward about a common thing like that."

"I never had a chance to practice before."

"Nonsense. Never had a chance to practice?"

"No, there were always plenty of young men around to do that for me, you know, dear."—Omaha World.

A Negro Uprising in Pittsburg.

"There was a negro uprising on Wylie street this morning," remarked the judge.

"Was there?" asked the major.

"Yes, at least I suppose there was, for as I came down I heard a colored woman scream: 'Yo thar, George Washington Snow, ef you don't git right up yo won't git no breffus.'"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Family Supplied.

"You love my daughter?" said the old man.

"Love her?" he exclaimed passionately, "why, sir, I would die for her! For one soft glance from those sweet eyes I would hurl myself from yonder cliff and perish, a bleeding, bruised mass, upon the rocks two hundred feet below!"

The old man shook his head.

"I'm something of a liar myself," he said, "and one is enough for a small family like mine."—N. Y. Sun.

A FRAGRANT SUBJECT.

Peppermint Oil, Where It is Grown, How Distilled and Whither Shipped.

"The speculators are at work again," said a wholesale druggist when shown a dispatch from Lyons, N. Y., stating that there are over 200,000 pounds of peppermint oil in Wayne county, and in consequence the price is lower than at any time in the past thirty years.

"Peppermint is a small crop compared with wheat or corn," he continued, "and it is grown on a small territory, Wayne county, in this state, producing nearly all the peppermint oil that is used in the world. These facts make it a tempting field for speculation."

"How do the speculators operate?"

They begin just as that dispatch indicates: first, by saying that there is a large quantity of oil held over from last year, which is not true; then they overstate the amount on hand, and finally they clinch the matter by saying that only $1.80 a pound is offered. That price may be offered, but the farmers who produce the oil are too sharp to sell at less than $2.50 a pound, and they will hold it and beat the speculators at their own game."

"Why is not more of it raised?"

"The mint requires peculiar soil and special care is needed both in the raising of the plant and the distilling of the oil. The crop is grown on land that is moist and has a rich, sandy loam. The mint is planted in furrows thirty inches apart, and while growing requires a great deal of cultivation, as every weed has to be kept out. Otherwise the oil would not be good. When full grown and in bloom it is cut with a scythe and hauled to the still as soon as it is wilted.

"Large steam tubs with tightly fitting covers are used to hold the mint, which is tramped down thoroughly. The steam is turned on at the bottom, and, passing upward through the mass of mint, vaporizes the oil and carries it out through a pipe at the top. This pipe carries the steam and oil into a spiral worm or cooler surrounded by cold water. Here the steam is condensed into water and the oil settles on top of it. Both now pass to a receiving tank, which has an overflow pipe running from the bottom up nearly to a level with the top. The object of this is to draw off the water from the bottom and leave the oil to be dipped from the top. The oil is as clear in color as the best kerosene. It is packed in tin cans for shipment and is sent all over the United States, and considerable of it goes abroad."

"Is there none raised in Europe?"

"Yes, Germany produces a little, but we send more to Germany than Germany raises, and we furnish not only England and France, but Russia and Austria as well. The greatest use for it is in confectionery. Peppermint lozengers are eaten from one end of the globe to the other, and you can form some idea of the quantity of them made from the fact that $150,000 worth of the oil is used every year to flavor them."—New York Mail and Express.

A Vacation in Solitude.

"Would you believe it possible to spend a vacation in solitude in a crowded hotel?" a young New Yorker asked a friend. "Well, it is. I've just done it. First, I happened to say in the smoking room that I had often caught blue fish by throwing a bare hook in the breakers and pulling it quickly. This is a regular practice at Nantucket, but on Long Island, where I told it, no one knew of it, and I was viewed with distrust by all the men. Next I got up a children's sailing party, and we were becalmed until 2 o'clock the next morning. When we reached the wharf half the ladies at the hotel were down there, the mothers frightfully angry, and some of them on the verge of hysterics. Not one of the ladies would even look at me after that.

"Finally, as I stood on the stoop one day, a stranger asked me if there were any musquitoes there. 'Millions,' said I. 'Some of the larger ones the sportsmen shoot, and think they are snipe.' It was the truth, only put a trifle more picturesquely than was necessary, perhaps. It turned out that that man had an idea of purchasing the hotel. After that the proprietor and clerks would not speak to me, and I finished the week with all the loneliness of a man on a raft in mid ocean."—Harper's Bazar.

Habits of a Gull.

Mr. William Brewster notes some interesting features in the habits of a young Kittiwake gull of the St. Lawrence. He brought home a young one, its mate having died of thirst, the other one surviving through the accidental discovery that the bird drank only salt water! Both the birds obstinately refused to drink fresh water. Observations on this bird by Professor A. Hyatt showed how slowly and timidly it acquired the art of swimming and flying. The bird when first forced to fly was thrown into the air, and, to the surprise of Professor Hyatt, flew with great rapidity and precision, circling about the house and through the apple trees, and, finally, flew near him several times in the greatest agitation till he caught the bird, which was completely exhausted. For a long time the bird went through this maneuver, showing that while it knew how to fly it could not alight, though it finally acquired this faculty.—Professor E. S. Morse in Popular Science Monthly.

The Truffle Hunting Pig.

In parts of France and Italy, instead of dogs, a pig is used. The kind known as the Perigord pig is thought to be the most expert. This animal also is susceptible of a certain amount of training. "As soon as the pig has disinterred the truffle," says Figuier, "it remains for a few moments motionless like a pointer; but, if it is kept waiting too long its gluttony frequently gets the better of its training." According to the same authority, a truffle pig, well taught, is worth about 200 francs.—Leisure Hours.

A Question of Authority.

A professor of medicine who was dangerously ill told the colleagues at his bedside that according to his diagnosis he could not live longer than three days. After three days, however, he began to mend, and his wife spoke to him in a hopeful strain. But the professor interrupted her angrily with the words: "Don't talk to me in this way; I must die; do you want me to make myself ridiculous?"—Fliegende Blaetter.

HIT IT HARD.

A Dollar Investment Produces $5,000.

As noiselessly as the snow comes down did the magic number, 69,368, slip from the wheel of The Louisiana State Lottery on the 8th inst., and as noiselessly were the glad tidings communicated by the managers to the fortunate owner of the lucky number, Mr. Thomas R. Miller, now residing at 1213 Lawrence street, in this city, that he had drawn one-tenth of the second capital prize of $50,000—or in other words, the handsome sum of $5,000—on an investment of $1, which amount the company hold subject to his order, and would be happy to remit at his pleasure.

Coming as this magnificent prize did, without an effort, it may be pardonable if in the language of precious stones, it is likened to the topaz—November's jewel—which, so long as its owner holds undisputed possession, is supposed to keep off bad dreams, and in other ways brighten the sunshine of his daily life.

A News reporter desiring to secure a correct statement of the facts, actuated him to look Mr. Miller up, which he did yesterday morning, and found him, as informed, at his residence, 1213 Lawrence street. Mr. Miller is a first-class, industrious mechanic, 38 years of age, and holds the confidence and respect of all those with whom he is acquainted.

He has been a resident of Denver for about a year, and he is so infatuated with the "Queen City" that he has concluded to invest his money here in real estate, which will doubtless pay nearly as great a dividend as on his investment of one dollar in the Louisiana lottery.—Denver (Col.) News, Nov. 24.

THREE SORTS OF WOMEN

To be Seen Almost Any Day on the Main Street of the Metropolis.

There are three distinct sorts of women to be seen on Broadway, which divides itself into three distinct streams of females, streams which flow within definite limits and rarely encroach on each other's territory. Women begin to be seen in numbers on Broadway at about Forty-fifth street. These women are New Yorkers pur et simple. On them are to be seen what are distinctly New York styles. This is the ground that fashion writers haunt for hints as to the styles of the coming season. They are slim, clean limbed, with hair as smooth as satin and cut in little pointed bangs that are never curled and never have a hair out of place. They wear very rich and very simple clothes, with a fit and a finish that speaks of Paris, London and the very best dressmakers and tailors of this city. They never admit any eccentricities of dress, and are so severely costumed that they considerably resemble each other and would scarcely be called beautiful so much as chic. This stream flows down to Sixteenth street and there it stops, absolutely and at once, and one never sees a single woman of it below that part of town.

At Fourteenth begins a crowd of strangers. All along that thoroughfare the strangers are mostly from the small towns about New York, and provincialism has marked them for its own. Their clothes are echoes of past fashions, their bangs are flamboyant, they carry little hand sachels and cluster about the shop windows. At home against their own background they are very attractive looking, but against the radiant freshness and fine grooming of the New York girl they look not quite well kept.

After turning the Fourteenth street corner one begins to see the western and southern girls, who wear expensive materials that are well made but lack in style. This autumn one recognizes these women by the heliotrope gowns that New York abandoned last spring. They are, as a rule, extremely pretty in a picturesque, individual fashion. Particularly is this true of the middle aged women, who retain the beauty of their figures wonderfully, and who have, many of them, big, soft dark eyes and thick gray curls around their brows. They are neither so fair nor so rosy as New York women.

Below Eighth street the crowd changes for a third time and are native New Yorkers again. These are the women who work for their living, and may be seen in groups of two and three going home anywhere between 4 and 7 o'clock. These women have a good looking sprinkling of elderly, meager females in dingy black, with anxious faces and little black bags in which they carry their lunch to the offices where they work. Many of them are pretty and many young. Their clothes are evidently selected with an eye to wear, the purchases evidently being had in mind whether the material would show spots and dust and whether it was the same on both sides, so that it would "turn." Their general appearance shows that they have been hard at work all day and have had meager toilet appliances to repair damages before coming out on the street. Many of them walk arm in arm, with a little independent half masculine air that they have insensibly picked up from their employers, and jostle through the hurrying throngs of men without noticing them. They are pretty and ladylike, as a rule.—New York World.

The Advertising that Does't Pay.

"It's all humbug to talk to me of the benefits of advertising," said the sour-looking man; "I spent $175 last year in advertising and I was closed out by the sheriff in January. The money was wasted, sir; every cent of it. Advertising is no good.'

"What papers did you advertise in?" inquired a sympathizing bystander.

"What papers? Thunder! I didn't use any papers. I had my advertisements painted on fence boards."—Chicago Tribune.

Earthquake Proof Buildings.

The government of Japan has invited several scientific bodies to appoint a joint committee to examine and report upon the type of buildings best calculated to resist shocks of earthquake. This is in view of the fact that whereas Japanese houses were formerly constructed of wood, masonry is now coming largely into use, especially in the construction of public buildings.—Chicago Times.

His Oratory Was Appreciated.

While Senator Harris was speaking at Cynthiana the other day, a half intoxicated Irishman, who had crawled up on the rear of the platform, interrupted him several times with remarks that were not quite intelligible. Finally Mr. Harris turned to the man and said:

"Please don't interrupt me, my friend. I am not much used to public speaking, and if you want to talk I'll have to quit."

"Bless yes!" said the Irishman, "it's not after interruptin' ye I am. I'm only approvin' of what ye say. Faith, and I didn't know it was in yez to do as well as yer doin'."

The senator from Madison was completely knocked out by this speech, but he bowed his thanks to the Hibernian, and joined heartily in the laughter which the latter's response had caused.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HEADACHE AND DYSPEPSIA.

No. 512 West 57th St. N. Y.
June 29, 1885.

I have been a martyr to bilious headache and dyspepsia. Any indiscretion in diet, over-fatigue, or cold, brings on a fit of indigestion, to be followed by a headache lasting two or three days at a time. I think I must have tried over twenty different remedies, which were recommended as certain cures by loving friends, but it was no use. Like the Irishman, I got no better very fast. At last I thought I would take a simple course of purgation with Brandreth's Pills. For the first week I took two Pills every night, then one Pill for thirty nights; in that time I gained three pounds in weight, and never have had an ache or a pain since.

HOME NEWS.

— A full line of stationary at Huntingston, Oceanside.

— Capt. J. A. Frazier made a flying business trip to San Bernardino Friday of last week.

— For fine Christmas goods go to HUNTINGTON'S Drug store, Oceanside.

— Holyday presents. Fine stock of watches, clocks, jewelery, spectacles, stationary, toys, etc., by C. SALAEIN, Oceanside.

— Some beautiful and odd designs in Christmas cards at HUNTINGTON'S, Oceanside.

— James Kennedy will soon move to Leugonia, nine miles south from Carlsbad where he has purchased a tract of one hundred and twenty acres of land.

— Henry Stollenberg of Shelby, Iowa, was on our streets this week circulating among his friends and taking in some of Carlsbad scenery.

— The carpenter work on Capt. Wadsworth's elegant residence is complete and building turned over to the painters and decorators who are wofking full force and executing fine work.

— Claus Bruening arrived from Preston, Iowa, this week and is busy getting material together for a residence which will be erected upon property he purchased a few days ago. Another good citizen for Carlsbad.

— We are pleased to note the arrival of D. C. Place of Osceola, Nebr., at Carlsbad last Monday. He has purchased the property of James Kennedy on 2nd Street. Mr. Place will soon move his family to our city and make his permanent home with us.

— Henry Specht, proprietor of Specht's Hotel, Preston, Iowa, arrived with his wife and daughter last Thursday to spend the winter in our beautiful all year resort. He is casting his eye about for Carlsbad property which means eventually that Preston, Iowa, will lose part of her population.

— Harry Buchanan and S. M. Ralls of St. Paul, Nebr. and E. M. Brass and L. A. Clark of this city drove out to the San Luis Rey Mission last Wednesday seeing sights and exploring the mysteries of that wonderful place. The drive to the mission from Carlsbad is delightful and the scenery is seldom equaled.

— To-morrow the Columbus, Nebr., party reinforced by a goodly number of our stately citizens will drive to San Luis Rey Mission and eat christmas dinner in genuine spanish style at the hotel at that place; a visit to California is incomplete without this side tripe of only seven miles.

— Col. Daniel Boone and his sister Mrs. Mary Heimphill of Clarksville, Mo., are visiting their brother-in-law Col. S. C. Smith. To say these visitors are delighted with our country is placing it mild. May their stay be crowded full of pleasure and become permanent residents with us in the wish of the SEA LION.

— M. S. Ralls, E. L. Buchanan and Harry Buchanan of St. Paul, Nebr., arrived at Carlsbad this week and are busy taking in our beautiful country and climate. These three young men seem to be endowed with the usual Nebraska push and energy and ere long we expect to be able to enroll them as permanent fixtures of our city.

— F. E. Knowles of Wellington, Kansas, who came to Carlsbad last August and made some valuable purchases within our city came again last Wednesday evening this time bringing his wife and family for the purpose of making Carlsbad his future home. Already Mr. Knowles has lumber on the ground for his residence on 5th Street and will soon be enjoying the full blessings of Carlsbad pure air and sea breeze as become a good citizen. We extend Mr. K. and family a cordial welcome.

— A number of our young people with the true spirit which actuates good motions have arranged for a pleasant christmas eve entertainment this Saturday evening to be given at the school building. Candies for the little ones and a joyful time for all will be the order of the hour. Let every one turn out and add to the festal occasion. The programme will be found in another column.

— In our description of Mr. Schutte's pallatial residence in last weeks issue we stated the building contains fifty-six windows, twenty-eight of which were outside. In justice to Mr. Schutte we desire to correct the error. The building contains one hundred and eighteen windows, fifty-six of which are outside. Plenty of light and sunshine is the order of the day in Carlsbad and Mr. Schutte struck the key note in the plans for his residence.

— Mrs. Wm. Clark of Westerly, R. I., who has been visiting recently at Los Angeles and Mrs. J. A. Ferris of New York City are visiting their brother our Capt. J. A. Frazier on the terrace, and enjoying the beauties of our country. Mr. Ferris, husband of last named lady, is an extensive business man located in New York City and has already located branch houses in San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. He will be in Carlsbad soon visiting relatives and will we anticipate secure one of those beautiful blocks on the terrace for a residence.

— Mr. D. J. Roberts and H. W. Baker arrived from Independence, Iowa, last Tuesday. Our fellow townsman J. D. Crain is an old time friend of Mr. Roberts and is showing him the beauties of the ideal city of California. Mr. R. says he is so favorably impressed with our location that he has decided to remain during the winter and probably move his family here in the spring. We need just such wide-awake men as these in Southern California.

— The Mammoth Hotel is being pushed right upward as rapidly as men and money can do it. The first story is up and flobring being laid. Mr. Culver, supt. of the building informs the writer that after this week his present force of ten carpenters will be increased to fifteen. Lumber for the Hotel is arriving on almost every train and we can assume our friends that there will not be an hours delay in pushing this building to its completion.

— Geo. Lehman, G. B. Spiece and Charles Morse arrived Thursday evening from Columbus, Nebr. These gentlemen have been two weeks en-route and as result have visited thus far all points of interest in California. They are perfectly astonished at our beautiful location and inhesitatingly declare it the finest one yet visited and Carlsbad for its age, in point of natural advantages, improvements, scenery, beautiful ground, elegant residences and prospects for immediate future stands second to no point yet visited in Southern California. Of course they will make soon purchases, the particulars of which the SEA LION will advise its readers in next issue. Our citizens extend these Nebraska friends a hearty welcome and will be glad to assist in making their stay in our midst one continual pleasure.

— The poet in writing "December is as pleasant as May" certainly had his mind on Southern California. In the Eastern and Northern states the chief persuit of man at this season of the year is to skirmish around to keep from freezing to death. Here it is somewhat different, sun is shining, birds singing, doors open, flowers blooming and all nature seems to be decked for some festive occasion. As we write, a party of young people are riding the swells beyond the breakers on the placid Pacific which lies like one grand shifting panorama at our feet. The little children are sporting upon the hard beach near the waters edge while a little farther up the coast the clatter of the horses feet are heard as they are being exercised under the influence of the morning sun and so we might go ahead and cite instances and multiply argument in support of the poet's good judgment of our land of sunshine and sea breeze but what is the use. When we used to hover around a fifty-dollar base burner fed with fourteen dollar hard coal back east we used to think these few words were thrown in just simply to make the verse rhyme and we often wondered how such a poet could hold his job in imposing upon the half frosen people in that manner. But we desire to appologize to the gifted poet for all we may have said not especially to his credit. He was here first.

FIRE AT SEA!

THE STEAMSHIP SAN VICENTE BURNED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 21.—The freight steamer San Vicente, plying between this city and Santa Cruz took fire last night off Pigeon Point, forty miles south of the Golden Gate, and burned to the water's edge. The crew consisted of nineteen officers and men. The burned vessel was sighted by the steamer Queen of the Pacific, bound from San Diego to this point. Several boats were lowered and went to the riscue of the San Vicente's crew. Captain Charles Lewis and the second mate were found on the deck of the steamer preparing to jump into the sea as the flames were rapidly surrounding them. The first mate and five sailors were found in a small boat. The men were all taken on board of the Queen and one of the sailors died in a few hours from the effects of exposure. No trace could be found of the other eleven men who composed the crew and they are supposed to have all been lost. When the fire was discovered the men became panic striken; and most of them jumped into one of the boats, but the tackle which held it was burned away and the boat fell, throwing the men into the water. The San Vicente was owned by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company and was valued at $30,000. No insurance.
